I understand that signing up for a CSA share is a commitment to sharing this season with the farm—and all the risks that growing brings with it. Since harvests are not always predictable, I, as a CSA member,
agree to accept what comes my way week to week.
(Since being suprised is half the fun!)

SO HOW DOES A CSA WORK?

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) is based on a partnership between the farmer that grows the food and the consumer who eats it. The consumer pays for an entire season's worth of produce in the early spring. This allows the farmer to know how much to grow in the upcoming season and use the funds from pre-sold farm shares to purchase seeds, invest in equipment, etc. As the weather warms up, the farmer and eater are essentially partners. Together they share in the risks inherent in growing—ideal weather and weekly produce shares will overflow, an unexpected frost or a hungry family of voles and the consumer's share of the harvest is reduced.

Fortunately, Soggy Bottom Farms is staffed with experienced growers (and vole removers!) and the rewards are great when things go well. Starting in late May you will be able to come and pick-up your weekly farm share in either Pullman or Moscow. We also offer home delivery for those that want the convenience of having fresh fruits and vegetables delivered directly to your door. This will continue for 24 weeks until the snow and cold finally brings the season to a close.

The really special and terrific thing about Soggy Bottom Farms CSA program is that it serves the entire community. Not only will you receive delicious, locally-grown fruits and vegetables on a weekly basis, but this season your investment will allow 20 local families struggling with the economic downturn to do the same.

WHAT CAN I EXPECT?

The content of the weekly shares will vary with the change in season, but here is what we promise week in and week out:

—Soggy Bottom Farm is dedicated to delivering freshly picked produce that is grown using sustainable, chemical-free growing methods that meet and beat USDA organic standards.

—This season we plan to cultivate several different varieties of the following vegetables. Some will be familiar, some may be new, but all will be harvested at the peak of ripeness, and picked just before you receive them.

Basil	Leeks
Beets	Lettuce
Bok choy	Napa Cabbage
Broccoli	Onions
Broccoli Raab	Peas
Cabbage	Peppers
Carrots	Potatos
Cauliflower	Pumpkins
Chard	Radishes
Cherry Tomatoes	Spinach
Cilantro	Strawberries
Corn	Summer squash
Cucumbers	Tomatoes
Garlic	Turnips
Kale	Winter squash

—We also promise to include some unexpected treats like fresh raspberries, bundles of newly cut sunflowers and a periodic newsletter filled with tips and recipes.

ABOUT THE FARM

Soggy Bottom Farm is a 10-acre family-owned farm committed to producing sustainably grown vegetables, fruits, poultry and eggs. Located 3 miles east of Moscow, its mission is to provide fresh produce to families of all socio-economic levels who live here on the Palouse. By partnering with Backyard Harvest, Soggy Bottom Farms is able to provide reduced-cost and work shares to our neighbors in need—providing them with healthier alternatives to the canned and processed goods that fill the food bank shelves.

Here are the people that will bring the Palouse all of this delicious food:

Claire Lichtenfels

Owner

Claire lives at Soggy Bottom Farm with her husband Hal, four children and a myriad of animals. Drawing from years of personal gardening experience and CSA farming at the WSU Organic Farm, Claire brings a perfect mix of knowledge and commitment to Soggy Bottom's mission to provide everyone in our community with access to fresh local produce, regardless of income level.

Isaak Jule

Farm Manager

Isaak comes to Soggy Bottom Farm with two seasons of successful non-profit farming and four summers of study on Moscow's Affinity Farm. His burgeoning farm knowledge, innovative ideas and strong back ought to prove useful in the upcoming season.

Marci Miller

CSA Coordinator

Marci is completing her degree in Conservation Social Science at the University of Idaho. She served as the President and CSA Coordinator for UI's Soil Steward's program and is excited to continue sharing her knowledge of fresh produce with the community.
